The DOOMED DRIVER

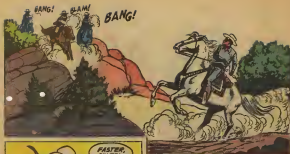

ONE MAN'S PRIDE

COURTESY, ILLUSTRATION BY WALTER PIERCE AND LARRY JOE

Mace Danner, sheriff of Rowhide was a proud man, but he had to swallow his pride that day as he led the posse back into town through the driving rain. Even before he dismounted Rowhide citizens were crowding around.

"Sorry, boys, but we lost them in the foothills when the storm hit us."

Gorley, president of the Rowhide Bank growled. "And I'm supposed to kiss twenty thousand dollars goodbye just like that, hey? Danner, you should have known Smart Sam would hit this town as soon as he broke out of the pen."

"Reckon I should have, Gorley. Smart Sam always figured it was my evidence that sent him to prison, and he swore he'd get even."

"Looks like he's doing it, too, making a fool out of you this way," commented a bystander.

"You're right, friend," said Mace with a grimace. "Smart Sam even stole my best horse from the livery stable to do the job. That's what I call rubbing it in." He paused reflectively. "I sure would like to run into Mr. Smart Sam right now."

Danner's chance came the next morning when his riderless horse came limping back into town. Pinned to the saddle was a note which read: "Here is your horse, Lowdog. He's no use to me now. But I'll see you again soon. I'm not through with you yet."

As the towns watched, Danner folded the note and then bent to examine his horse's hoof. A moment later he had picked out a deeply imbedded piece of black gravel. "Only one place a horse could pick up a piece of black rock like this," Mace said to no one in particular. "That old volcanic flue they call Devil's Peak."

"Then that must be Smart Sam's hide-out. Guess he gave himself away, this time."

"Don't sell him short, partner. They don't call him Smart Sam for nothing. This is all too neat. Before I head out to Devil's Peak I'm going to figure out what's behind this." But figuring didn't seem to help Danner much for the next day as he rode through the volcanic debris that surrounded the base of Devil's Peak, Mace found himself confronted by the guns of Smart Sam and his friends.

"Just as I figured," said Smart Sam. "If I needed you enough you'd come up here and try to take me by yourself."

Mace looked about him at the half dozen guns of the gang leveled at him. "Sam, if you've got any sand at all you'll settle this with me man to man."

Sam roared with laughter. "Man to man?" he bellowed joyously. "Don't be a fool, Mace. I'll never give you a chance like that. Say your prayers, lawman."

"Reckon you'd better say your prayers, Sam," a voice echoed behind the gang. As they whipped around they found themselves facing the twenty guns of the posse.

"It was a trap," roared Smart Sam. "While I was busy watching you, your men sneaked in to surround us."

"That's right, Sam," said Mace. "Reckon you outfoxed yourself this time, so you and your men better drop your guns."

And as Mace Danner led his prisoners into Rowhide he was a proud man once more—a mighty proud man.

NEW SOUND COLOR FILM produced by

In Cooperation With The

DEPARTMENT OF THE AIR FORCE
WASHINGTON

OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY

February 12, 1959

Dear Mr. Haugh:

I have received the information regarding the production of the "Rocket Club" film by your company. We are happy to have such enthusiastic support in our quest to properly guide the interests of young amateur rocket aspirants.

As has been your primary interest over the years in the development of safe air rules for the youngsters of America, so we are very concerned over the safety of our youth in their amateur representations in the rocket and missile age.

It appears that, in your film, you have accomplished these aims adequately and are providing the proper guidance for the talent considerations that must be applied to this program.

May we commend you for the public-spirited sponsorship of this project and your support of the subject which is encourage increased study of the sciences.

We firmly believe that we can respond most effectively to the representations required by skirting qualified youth, through such programs as these, to become interested in and possibly pursue careers in science or engineering.

We expect to use "Rocket Club" widely to inform youth and parents of America of the dangers inherent in unapproved and uncontrolled experimentation with amateur rockets and other amateur explosive devices.

Sincerely,

E. S. Lusk
